Week 1 individual reflection Oscar Palmqvist

1. What do I want to learn or understand better?

Having worked with scrum and agile development earlier, with moderate success, I'm eager to learn the nuances which increase productivity. How to decide and divide tasks so that they can be independently developed.

2. How can I help someone else, or the entire team, to learn something new?
A person needs to see the reason to learn something in order to be willing to learn it, unless they have some innate interest in it. So pointing out the problems that exist today and how we potentially could solve them is a good start. But as always making sure to communicate and include each other. In previous dalliances with agile development, members who are more experienced with a topic also take the responsibility of teaching others, instead of just doing all of that specific work themselves.

3. What is my contribution towards the team's use of Scrum?
Trying to make sure that there are clear and manageable tasks and user stories. So that we really can achieve that desirable independent work, without having to wait on others.

4. What is my contribution towards the team's deliveries?
Making sure that all tasks and commitments are achievable within the sprint. Trying to allow as much independent work as possible. Of course also to make sure I deliver on my commitments.
